

James M. Altieri was born and grew up in New Jersey. He graduated Magna Cum Laude from the University of Maryland with degrees in economics and history. Jim went on to Fordham Law school and graduated with honors before embarking on a private practice legal career in New York. After representing major American Corporations in a broad range of litigated matters with the firm of Simpson, Thacher and Bartlett in New York, he left in 1982 and became Managing Partner and Chair of the Strategic Planning Committee at Drinker, Biddle and Reath, New York office. After 45 years as a corporate litigator, Jim and his wife Geri retired to Indian River Shores and have made this their sole and permanent residence. In his spare time Jim enjoys golf, family and travelling with his wife.
